“ I learned a lot from working at the bus garage with Charles, some very good and some not so good. I blame him for making me a big man that I am today. He would bring red beans and rice. I would fry fish at 7:30 in the morning for breakfast before we started working on the bus. If someone could write a book about all of us working at Westside, it would be the size of an old phone book. Charles would be the ring leader of every chapter good and bad, but mostly good. Just thinking about him, makes me miss him very much. I keep a picture in my office of the old Westside gang. Hard to believe he's in heaven watching down on us now with some of that old gang. The next time the power goes out on a hot day and there is no bad weather, I'll know that it's him messing with us, making us sweat. Even up there he is still playing games. Miss you man. The bar is open. ,Wade Evans
